Father Ken's Note...

Once there was a poor man and a rich man who were neighbors. The poor man was a very happy and jolly man, and never worried about locking his doors at night or even during the day. He also always enjoyed a sound sleep every single night.

The rich man, looking at the poor man, often became jealous. The rich man felt that his poor neighbor did not have anything to worry about. The rich man always had to lock and bolt his doors both night and day, and the rich man never had a peaceful sleep as he always worried about his money.

One day the rich man decided to give the poor man a pile of his money, $100,000 to be exact. The poor man initially was thankful for the gift, but quickly his appreciation collapsed. The very night after receiving this huge sum of money the poor man had to lock his doors, concerned that someone might enter his house and try to steal his money. During the night the poor man had to wake up several times to see if his money was safe and sound. The poor man realized fast that wealth does not always bring happiness. Waking up in the morning after a restless sleep, the poor man went to the rich man's house to give him his money back. The poor man said to the rich man, "Sir, I don't need this money. It has taken away, in just one day and night, my joy and my peace. My happiness is in my want, not my surplus."

Father Ken
